PREFACE

Research articles are contributed by scholars to various research journals all over the world. Such journals are, therefore, an important treasure-house of a country's contemporary thought and the work of its intellectuals. Since the articles deal with a variety of subjects, it is difficult for research workers to find relevant material for their particular subjects at one place. It is therefore essential that subject-wise indices of articles in all important research journals should be prepared and published for ready reference of scholars, teachers and research students.

Among the research journals on humanities, particularly in the field of Indology, the Indian Historical Quarterly of Calcutta has occupied a prominent position for 39 years from 1925 to 1963. After the first two numbers of 1963 in one volume, its publication is unfortunately in abeyance. The research articles published in it are of a very high order, being contributed by reputed Indian and foreign savants. Often my students in the College and the University complained of the lack of some easy reference or index to learned articles on their particular subjects. I had to tell them to consult some important journals and hunt out the material relevant for their purpose. But the idea of preparing one such index haunted my mind, and ultimately, I decided to take up the Indian Historical Quarterly for this arduous but useful task. I shall feel amply rewarded if this index serves to save some of the valuable time of the students of Indology.

Note : Unfortunately, this lengthy list of errors and omissions is largely due to the inefficiency, indifference and mismanagement of the first Press which took a vexingly long time of over a year and a half in printing the first 160 pages. Easily detectable minor spelling mistakes in these pages have not been corrected. The rest of the book is printed in another Press. The quality of work is before the readers.
